By rail: There are two main stations in Bristol - Temple Meads and Parkway. If you have the option, we recommend you go to Temple Meads which is much closer and has bus services which go to the university.

From Bristol Temple Meads station: Temple Meads station is about one and a quarter miles from the university. There is a free hospital and university bus shuttle service which is run exclusively for the use of staff, patients and visitors of UBHT and the University of Bristol. The service runs frequently during working hours between Temple Meads station, the hospital and the university precinct. There is also a taxi rank at the station. If you'd rather not get a taxi we are very close to the main Number 1 bus route which goes from Temple Meads station.

From Bristol Parkway station: Parkway station is about six miles from the university. You are recommended to take a taxi.

By coach: The coach station is on Marlborough Street which continues on from Upper Maudlin Street near the top right corner on map. To get to the university, either walk up Marlborough Street and Upper Maudlin Street to the precinct, or catch the free hospital and university bus shuttle bus which stops at the coach station. There is also a taxi-rank outside the station. For information about coaches, consult the National Express web pages.

By air (from London Heathrow): There is a direct National Express Coach Service between Heathrow and Bristol. Alternatively you can take the Heathrow Airport Express to London Paddington and a Great Western train from Paddington to Bristol. There is also a Railair link coach service which runs between Heathrow and Reading. Most Paddington to Bristol trains stop at Reading.

By air (from Bristol Airport): The airport is about eight miles to the south of Bristol centre. There is a frequent bus service from the airport to Temple Meads station and Bristol bus station, or take a taxi.
